EVENT SITUATION

You are to assume the role of marketing director for WORN, a regional retailer that sells a variety of apparel, accessories, shoes and small gifts. The senior vice president of marketing (judge) has asked you to determine how to best use a customer database to send out specialized emails that will generate repeat business.

There are 25 WORN stores in the region. Each store is quite large and has many different departments: women's apparel, men's apparel, children's apparel, baby apparel, accessories, footwear, active wear and small gifts. The retailer is known for its trendy yet affordable merchandise and targets all demographics.

Six months ago, cashiers asked all customers at check-out to submit email addresses. The email addresses, along with all other receipt information, were then part of a database of information useful to WORN marketing executives. The senior vice president of marketing (judge) wants you use the information collected in the database to send out specialized emails to customers. The senior vice president (judge) hopes that the specialized emails will result in an increase in repeat business.

The following information has been collected from every transaction at all 25 WORN stores: email address, store number, cashier name, date/time, merchandise sold from each department, total amount spent in each department, coupon or discount used for purchases, and payment type. The database also keeps track of how many times an email address is associated with a purchase, so marketers can identify first-time shoppers and loyal customers.

The senior vice president (judge) wants you to analyze the information type collected in the database and determine which is the most useful information and how it can be used in direct emails. The senior vice president (judge) wants to make sure customers are receiving relevant emails to ensure they are opened and read rather than deleted or marked as spam.

You will present your recommendations to the senior vice president (judge) in a role-play to take place in the vice president's (judge's) office. The senior vice president (judge) will begin the role-play by greeting you and asking to hear your analysis. After you have presented your ideas and have answered the senior vice president's (judge's) questions, the senior vice president (judge) will conclude the role-play by thanking you for your work.

JUDGE ROLE-PLAY CHARACTERIZATION

You are to assume the role of senior vice president of marketing for WORN, a regional retailer that sells a variety of apparel, accessories, shoes and small gifts. You have asked the marketing director (participant) to determine how to best use a customer database to send out specialized emails that will generate repeat business.

There are 25 WORN stores in the region. Each store is quite large and has many different departments: women's apparel, men's apparel, children's apparel, baby apparel, accessories, footwear, active wear and small gifts. The email addresses, along with all other receipt information, were then part of a database of information useful to WORN marketing executives. You want the marketing director (participant) to use the information collected in the database to send out specialized emails to customers. You hope that the specialized emails will result in an increase in repeat business.

The following information has been collected from every transaction at all 25 WORN stores: email address, store number, cashier name, date/time, merchandise sold from each department, total amount spent in each department, coupon or discount used for purchases, and payment type.

The database also keeps track of how many times an email address is associated with a purchase, so marketers can identify first-time shoppers and loyal customers.

You want the marketing director (participant) to analyze the information type collected in the database and determine which is the most useful information and how it can be used in direct emails. You want to make sure customers are receiving relevant emails to ensure they are opened and read rather than deleted or marked as spam.

The participant will present information to you in a role-play to take place in your office. You will begin the role-play by greeting the participant and asking to hear about his/her ideas.

During the course of the role-play you are to ask the following questions of each participant:

1. Do you think any of the information in our database is not useful? Why or why not?
2. How often should we send out specialized emails?
3. Do you think email promotions are effective?

Once the marketing director (participant) has presented ideas and has answered your questions, you will conclude the role-play by thanking the marketing director (participant) for the work.

You are not to make any comments after the event is over except to thank the participant.
